

We then crossed a small stream a little below a house and followed a grassy path down to a very beautiful valley near Castle Cartock. We followed the road in the direction of this village wondering when a blue cloud of smoke going to appear, and from it came a green Ford Anglia car with a number plate of X.H.H. 14.B. (For now we knew that a new car was going to be bought). It arrived 1.10 minutes late - that means 1.10 minutes, exactly, after our watches recorded 5 p.m.

Danny and Julian had played at Lambloy colliery with the trucks before they had gone with daddy to collect us, and so we decided to do the same. Soon, however, it was evident that we were being watched and so once again, hostilities took us from an exploration of Lambloy colliery but we came again as recorded in the Burnhead railway notes.

Photographs